

Why I Am Pro-life

Did you know that a 14-week-old baby can suck his or her thumb? Some babies and toddlers suck their thumbs if they are tired or need comfort. Are these unborn children not doing the same thing for maybe the same reason? I believe that a baby in the womb and a baby that is then later born are the same human beings; they both have the same body, soul, and thoughts of their own.

Babies that are first conceived in the womb already have the cells to make their own eye and hair color, if they will be male or female, and if they will look like their mom or dad, yet some people believe that this human is not yet their own person.

Should abortion be legal or illegal? If it is illegal to murder people, then yes, abortion should be illegal, because every abortion is killing a human life. Everyone should agree that something is killed during an abortion. Some people think that this embryo or fetus, which are the scientific names for the unborn, is not a human, but then what is it? This is not just something: it is a human being with a soul. If a dog is going to have puppies, are those puppies in the womb not puppies? If an eagle lays its eggs in the nest, everyone would agree that those eggs are eagle eggs that will hatch into eagles. Why then would people argue about a human fetus actually not being a human?

If a little child runs up to his parents and asks, "Can I kill this cat?" most people would say, "Absolutely not!" suppose this child came up again and said, "Can I kill my little sister?" Again, the answer would be "Absolutely not!" but with horror. But what would be the difference in killing this little human being, versus someone killing a smaller human being in the womb?

Imagine if you were a young child and didn't know what abortion was, you would probably automatically think that a baby in the womb is an actual human being, versus a bunch of cells with no meaning. This reasoning is why I am pro-life.
